

ABSTRACT

Various methods and apparatuses are described in which a digital video camera has a non-volatile digital storage medium that stores captured video content in a digital form. A server external to the digital video camera has a communication port to receive the captured video content. The server has a processor configured to process the video content and to supply the video content to a consumer in a video format useable by other consumer devices.